ARE YOU LINKEDIN?

We've all heard the saying "it's not what you know, it's who you know". LinkedIn is a powerful social media site that acts as an online business community. According to marketing expert Chuck Hester "Eighty percent of LinkedIn users are post-secondary grads so the connections you'll be making will be very valuable and relevant to you. It has 61 million users from 200+ countries around the world. A new member joins LinkedIn almost every second, and executives from all Fortune 500 companies are LinkedIn members". In an interview with social media guru Shel Holtz, Hester strongly encourages twenty-somethings (or the Facebook generation) not to be intimidated by LinkedIn. Investing in creating a "Top LinkedIn Profile" will catch the eye of the many employers who can search for you using the LinkedIn search engine. Hester goes on to mention that "LinkedIn is actually one of the oldest social media (it was created in 2003) and will be around tomorrow" as its popularity increases with employers and job-seekers.

What should you put on your LinkedIn profile?

You should definitely include your work experience but lying, fudging and embellishing your resume will backfire and will get you in trouble. On the other hand, don't be vague. Provide specific examples of tasks performed and skills gained in your past positions. We highly recommend adding a picture to your profile. Employers are seven times more likely to view a profile with a picture than a profile without one.

Guy Kawasaki, the former chief evangelist of Apple, also highly recommends using LinkedIn to "Increase your visibility, improve your connectability, increase the relevancy of your job search, gauge the health of a company/industry and even ask your network for advice."

It's never too early to start networking! Don't wait until you graduate, take out 10-15 minutes out of your day, create a LinkedIn profile and start networking.

ATCO - NANCY SOUTHERN NAMED HONORARY CHIEF

ATCO President & Chief Executive Officer Nancy Southern received the name Aksi-toowa'paakii or Brave Woman when she became an honorary Chief of the Kainai (Blood Tribe) during a traditional ceremony on the Blood Reserve in southern Alberta on July 21.

Blood Tribe Chief and Grand Chief of Treaty 7, Charles Weasel Head, said he nominated Ms. Southern for the honour because of her spirit of entrepreneurship and efforts toward building mutually beneficial relationships with Aboriginal communities.

"I am deeply honoured to receive the Kainai Chieftainship," said Ms. Southern. "On behalf of my family and the people of ATCO, I will carry this honour forward with the highest regard and respect. It is both humbling and inspirational to become part of a great tradition. With this honour, I will continue to promote the sustainability of Canada's First Nations and all other Aboriginal communities."

The prestigious honour is seen as an official bridge between cultures, indicating to community members and all others, the selected individual is accepted and now a member of the Blood Tribe.

The Kainai Chieftainship comprises 40 living individuals. Past inductees include Pope John Paul II, Prince Charles and Prime Minister Stephen Harper. The Blood, Peigan and Siksika tribes form the Blackfoot Confederacy and are considered to be the oldest residents of the western prairie region.

WANT A JOB? GET SOCIAL! HOW TO USE SOCIAL MEDIA TO FIND A JOB

Looking for expert advice on how to use social media to land a job? Look no further! LYNX interviewed social media Guru, Shel Holtz, who has 35 years of experience, to weigh in on this matter.

Holtz advises you, the job seeker, to be innovative and to understand how your target employer uses social media, whether it's through a blog, Twitter or LinkedIn. For example, an innovative idea could be to create a one-page website containing a video resume.

Be aware of what organizations are doing in terms of social media recruiting. AT & T and PepsiCo are great examples of companies using social media. Do your research and customize your approach to fit the recruiting strategy of your target company.

Create/maintain a LinkedIn profile and make sure your profile is as complete and up-to-date as possible. The majority of hiring is no longer done using traditional recruiting methods. An employer's first stop is usually LinkedIn. There is no doubt that the recruiting trend is heading towards social media recruiting, but be careful not to share too much personal information or have discrepancies on your online profiles. Online transparency makes it very easy for employers to find out if you're lying! Yahoo CEO, Scott Thompson, recently resigned after it was discovered that he lied on his resume.

Social media is definitely here to stay. Use it to your advantage!

TELL ME ABOUT YOURSELF...

You are in a job interview and your potential employer says "tell me about yourself". You may draw a blank or start rambling about things irrelevant to the job, such as where you were born or which hockey team is your favorite. Ellen Gordon Reeves, the author of "Can I Wear My Nose Ring to the Interview?" warns that when you're asked that question, the employer is really asking you "what can you do for the company?" This is your chance to shine. Start by highlighting your strengths such graduating with honors or volunteering for an organization similar to the one you're applying to. Elaborate on the skills and experience you can bring to the company and remember that the employer will be thinking "how will hiring you help them."

CAREER FAIRS-WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW

Career Fairs are excellent for expanding your network and searching for work!

Employers and recruiters set up booths to meet with students and recent grads who are seeking Co-ops, internships, summer, part-time and full-time jobs and even volunteer opportunities.

When you attend Career Fairs, prepare for them as if you're preparing for a job interview.

This includes the following:

- Dress Professionally
- Do your research about the Career Fair companies.
- Have many copies of your résumé to hand out.
- When talking to recruiters, offer a warm smile and firm handshake.
- Prepare a short professional introduction of yourself and practice it.
- Ask for business cards and offer company representatives yours.
- Check with the rep if it is alright to follow up with him/her.
- Send a thank you note to the rep. within a week, or call or email him/her and follow up on any potential job offers.

Good Luck!
