Course Description

In this seminar we will explore the causes of conflicts between the sexes, in our own species and in other species as well. We will examine ultimate causes, that is, those that deal with evolutionary forces, and proximate causes, those that deal with developmental, social, and situational factors. We will focus on the causes of sexual coercion and spousal violence, and we will also examine, if time permits, less violent forms of conflict, such as jealousy, separation, and child custody disputes.

The topic of this course, although interesting on its own, is also an occasion to develop a habit of thought regarding explanations for human behaviour. By this I mean learning how to think about human behaviour scientifically and consiliently: The scientific method provides a powerful and objective way to test different explanations of why humans and other species behave the way they do, and explanations in a field of inquiry should be compatible with knowledge in other fields.

This course is also an occasion to develop new learning, writing, and oral presentation skills. Students will learn new material by preparing class presentations and leading class discussions. In many ways, this seminar will resemble graduate psychology seminars. Student attendance and participation in class discussions is required. Students will prepare for class discussion by reading relevant material and preparing questions and comments for discussion.

Each class will consist of a discussion of a book chapter or journal article. A team of two students will prepare a 20 min presentation of a chosen topic, and will lead a discussion. The student team will be responsible for finding one or two published empirical studies that speak to the topic and that are brief and interesting. Except for the textbook, the readings should be distributed to class members by email (preferably in PDF format), on the Friday preceding the discussion, at noon at the latest.

There will also be discussions led by the instructor and teaching assistant, including a discussion of the documentary ‘The Greatest Silence: The Rape of Congo’.

Evaluation

Evaluation will be based on a class presentation and leadership of class discussion (15-40%), a term-paper (0-40%), a book report (0-30%), and participation (20%). Details will be provided in class. Students determine for themselves the percentage of each evaluation component, within the range provided. Obviously, the total must be 100%. The determination of percentages is revealed to the professor at the time of submission of the evaluation. The term paper and book report are optional. The instructor and teaching assistant will provide feedback on drafts of the term paper and book report (except for two weeks prior to submission).

The following ranges will be used to convert percentage marks to a letter grade:

If you cannot be present for an evaluation you must contact the instructor as soon as possible before the date in question. Medical reasons must be supported by a statement that performance would be affected, with the physician’s name, address, and phone number included in the statement. Non-medical reasons must also be supported by appropriate documentation. Failure to notify the instructor prior to the date of evaluation will result in a mark of zero.
